WORKING SAFELY ON ELECTRICAL SYSTEMS

Hybrid and electric cars, which are becoming more and more present in our everyday lives, are causing immense changes in the handling of these high-tech vehicles.

For the workplaces of the future, special equipment is needed to ensure a safe working environment.

Insulating gloves for electrical systems

The protective electrical insulating gloves class 0 are soft and highly flexible. They are designed exclusively for electrical purposes as basic personal protective equipment when working under voltages up to 1 kV or as additional protective equipment for voltages above 1 kV.

They are worn as the first layer of protection and should be protected from damage with leather overgloves.

Per pair

£35

Leather overgloves

The robust gloves made of grained cowhide leather with split leather cuff form the top protective layer for electrically insulating gloves. Commonly used electrical insulating gloves for protection against electric shock are made of latex and have low resistance to mechanical damage. Therefore, electrically insulating gloves should be used together with leather gloves.
